

Excerpt from The Career of George Robert Fitzgerald: Better Known as Fitzgerald the Fire-Eater, in the West of Ireland In presenting this work to his Readers, the Author hopes that they will not pronounce their verdict solely on whatever drawbacks that may appear in its pages, but that the dearth of literature on the subject and the difficulty of collecting tradition will also be in evidence. However, he adds that no pains have been spared to test the Historical and Geographical references; that old magazines, mouldy documents, and obliterated manuscripts have been assiduously and exhaustively investigated; and that the Reader is always put on his guard when treading on the domain of Fable or Romance as opposed to Fact. It is only fair to acknowledge the valuable assistance the Author received from an eminent scholar in Irish Antiquities, George Dames Burtchaell, Esq., M.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law and Treasurer of the Royal Society of Antiquarians, Ireland; and also from an old and esteemed friend, John D. O'Hanlon, Esq., Barrister-at-Law and Treasurer of the Kings Inns, Dublin, a gentleman whose marvellous memory contains a store of varied antiquarian erudition.
